Sundays (Day 1) are longer walks. Maybe walk in a different place or town, try a new neighborhood or trail. Maybe take a hike?

Mondays (Day 2) are good rest days as it may be easier to spend more time out and about during the weekend. Rest days are as important as walk days.

Tuesdays and Thursdays (Day 3 and 5) are timed walks. Maybe have a specific route for each day and see how far you go in the time- as you get faster you will go farther and will have to adjust your route! Progress is always a good motivator. If you are walking with someone (or next to someone on a treadmill) you should be able to converse during these walks, but don't make it a "stroll".

Wednesdays (Day 4) are cross training (XT) days plus some of the strength/core exercises. These aren't massive strength programs to bulk you up, but rather these exercises provide overall strength and stability- keep these workouts short so you keep doing them. If you only have time for one workout- choose the strength on this day.

Fridays (Day 6) are rest days to get ready for the weekend.

Saturdays (Day 7) are walks for a certain distance, building up to the 5K distance. This is probably your most important day to see your progress.
